In their hostel room, Eita is napping after a visit to the National Archaeological Museum in Athens during the day of a partial solar eclipse. Antikythera joins Eita in bed. Eita awakens, unable to move. Eita thought they had this room to themselves ("Look Inward").

Inclusive Tech calls Eita, but Eita is unable to physically pick up. Eita uses voice commands to call back. They work as an IT specialist for this American hospital information system company. McPeak, their supervisor, asks Eita to return to work after a lengthy spiritual journey. Antikythera leaves and Eita can move again.

Eita returns to Inclusive Tech's headquarters. They start getting emails from Antikythera, urging them to do unspeakable acts against the healthcare industry. Eita sleeps that night, and Antikythera breaks in. They resemble an Inclusive Tech client. They voice command a 911 call. The police arrive and believe Eita to be crazy.

Eita reports the emails to McPeak. However, the emails are nowhere to be found. Eita becomes an insomniac. Eita accidentally sleeps on the job. Antikythera is heard in another room, doing a robbery. Antikythera enters, walking with a cane. They resemble another Inclusive Tech client. Antikythera pushes for Eita to erase a medical bill.

McPeak comes in to see a petrified Eita. They look at the monitor to see an erased medical bill. They understand that Eita is going through a lot since losing their partner to cancer. They are disappointed in Eita for letting their intrusive thoughts win and fires them.

Eita finally goes to sleep. Antikythera is a manifestation of Eita's visit to Antikythera mechanism, the oldest known analog computer. Antikythera is the figment of Eita's sleep paralysis.
